SPECIES

Lake Trout is a very slow growing, cold water specie that can reach impressive sizes. They are quite ravenous, and eat all other species they can catch. In the spring, we find them in shallower waters eating on easy game fish prey. As the summer progresses, and the water warms they go deeper, and an angler must change their tactics. They can be a little finicky to catch but when the bite is on, your chances of catching the fish of a life time are great... and if it's a smaller one that bites Very great shore lunch

The best season for Lake trout fishing is from May until late June.

Bull Trout is common in all streams in northern British Columbia.

We have, never the less, caught some very big ones in the lake, not common but they are there. It is a very aggressive specie, that chases just about any lure or big streamer fly. A very delicious eating fish! We catch the best Bull Trout in August, and November is also perfect!

Rainbow Trout is one of the prettiest trout we have at Williston Lake Outfitters. Beautiful blue/green on their backs to silver side and belly. Along their sides, a nice band of pink. They are located both in the lake and in our rivers and streams. Very common to catch using a variety of lures and flies. Very good for a shore lunch or in a smoker.

Kokanee is the non-migrating form of sockeye salmon. Like all pacific salmon, they will die after their first spawning. Kokanee has blue back and silver sides. When compared to other trout, they have finer scales, larger eyes, and deeply forked tail. Kokanee is caught from spring to fall. The best fishing for Kokanee is during late spring when plankton blooms are more common. By that time, the Kokanee becomes more aggressive and will be found closer to the surface. Trolling, still fishing, and jigging is among the preferred ways to fish for the Kokanee.
